Many climate models have been developed to perform climate projections, i.e. to simulate and understand climate changes in response to the emission of greenhouse gases and aerosols. In addition, models can be formidable tools to improve our knowledge of

Chapter 3. Modelling the climate system

Chapter 8 Climate Models and Their Evaluation Executive Summary This chapter assesses the capacity of the global climate models used elsewhere in this report for projecting future climate change. Confidence in model estimates of future climate evolution has been enhanced via a range of advances since the IPCC Third Assessment Report (TAR).

Climate Models and Their Evaluation - IPCC

This report describes the first phase of the Climate Change Integrated Modeling Project (CCIMP) to evaluate the effects of future climate change on the quantity and quality of water in the NYC water supply. The project is an element of DEP's Climate Change Action Plan released in 2008.

advances in the modelling of climate change due to increased greenhouse gases, improvements in the analysis of climate processes and feedbacks, and on advances in climate model validation that were not available to the IPCC in early 1990. This section is thus intended as an update to selected portions of the 1990 assessment rather climate change is largely caused by human activities? Scientists know that recent climate change is largely caused by human activities from an understanding of basic physics, comparing observations with models, and fingerprinting the detailed patterns of climate change caused by different human and natural influences.

Product (SAP), Climate Models: An Assessment of Strengths and Limitations. This is part of a series of 21 SAPs produced by the CCSP aimed at providing current assessments of climate change science to inform public debate, policy, and operational decisions. These reports are also intended to help the CCSP develop future program research priorities.
