Interleukin-6 (IL-6) is produced locally in working skeletal muscle and can account for the increase in plasma IL-6 during exercise. The production of IL-6 during exercise is related to the intensity and duration of the exercise, and low muscle glycogen content stimulates the production.

biological effects, assuming that the sites in which the average chemical concentrations exceeded the most ER-L and ER-M values would have the highest potential for effects.

Schematic presentation of the possible biological effects of muscle-derived IL-6. TG, triglyceride; FFA, free fatty acid. Besides the glucoregulatory effect of IL-6, this cytokine may also be involved in other metabolic pathways (Fig. 1).

The number of studies investigating potential biological, non-thermal effects of THz fields is small, but has been increasing over recent years due to the availability of adequate sources and detectors.

Potential health effects of exposure to electromagnetic wastewater treatment. The pollutants in wastewater can be divided into two broad categories: biological and chemical, with the major chemical pollutants being nitrogen, phosphorus, heavy metals, detergents, pesticides and hydrocarbons. The majority of waterborne microorganisms that cause human disease come from animal and human fecal wastes.

The biological effects of ionizing radiation can depend, among other factors, on: the type of radiation, the amount of the dose and the rate at which it is received, the type of tissues irradiated, and the age and sex of the exposed person.
